I am writing to express my deep concern over the continuing rise in energy prices and the significant burden this trend is placing on both individual households and the broader economy. While it is understood that global market fluctuations and supply chain factors contribute to energy costs, the current pace and scale of increase are becoming unsustainable for many Canadians.

For households, higher energy bills translate directly into increased financial stress. Families are being forced to make difficult trade-offs between essential needs—such as heating, food, and transportation. For low- and middle-income families in particular, these rising costs are eroding disposable income and diminishing quality of life.

At the macroeconomic level, persistently high energy costs have a ripple effect throughout the economy. Businesses face growing operational expenses, which in turn drive up the prices of goods and services, contributing to inflationary pressure. This cycle reduces consumer spending power, suppresses economic growth, and makes it harder for both individuals and enterprises to plan for long-term stability.

It is imperative that we address this issue with balanced and proactive measures. I urge Alectra to explore policy tools that can mitigate the impact of energy price increases—such as targeted relief programs, energy efficiency incentives, and investment in renewable and locally produced energy sources that can provide greater price stability in the long term.

Energy is a fundamental necessity, not a luxury. Ensuring its affordability is essential for social equity, economic competitiveness, and the well-being of all citizens. I sincerely hope that this matter will receive the urgent attention it deserves.

Thank you for your time and consideration.
