I live in a small single bedroom apartment with my current monthly hydro bill reaching $150 per month.
I make a large effort to conserve energy and still find the costs unmanageable.
Having electricity in a geographical location that faces extreme cold is a basic necessity.
The fact Canadians are having to freeze in their own homes because they can't afford to heat it is incomprehensible.

As someone who grew up in a family below the poverty line, I've worked exceptionally hard to have a comfortable and secure life. As a single, 30 year old female who has lived alone for 8 years, I've found it nearly impossible to maintain bills let alone get ahead.
HydroOne is the only option I have for hydro, there are no competitors or options to seek better pricing/options in my situation.

To raise prices while Canadians are already facing severe economical strain in every angle would be nothing less than unconscionable.
