Hello Janet: I suppose you are the spokes person that takes all the heat and grief from us, the consumer. Please forgive my anger but from what I read in the attachment of legalese, I see very little information short of hot air. Not from you, but from corporate.

I agree that we had an exceptional cold winter and yes, we did go through an extra amount of natural gas. If we (Ontario) had to buy more fuel to heat our homes, that's agreed to and for us to be charged more for the same cubic foot? Ok, maybe for a month or so until things balance out. I tried to read through to see if this was a short lived 40% hike or is the price hike indefinite? Typically when prices rise they do not go down. I would love to be a fly on the walls of the boardrooms and call some of these executives out. It's a well known fact that our gasoline prices are hiked because many have said, "they do it because they can". The same goes for government cost over runs
In essence we, the consumer, get ripped off again. It certainly looks like the energy sector is living off the backs of the consumer. Pump prices, hydro electric prices and now natural gas prices.
How permanent is this 40% price hike? The profit alone from each month of increased consumption should have provided enough funds to buy more fuel. $400 per year multiplied by the amount of users is a crime.
