Consultation that counts

Before a project begins, Pembina is in the field consulting with Aboriginal and local communities, landowners and other stakeholders affected by the proposed development. Our aim: to learn about their needs and expectations, and to address potential concerns. We know that effective engagement requires open, two-way communication and we employ a number of tools - including open houses, one-on-one discussions and community meetings - to identify and resolve issues and find solutions.

The feedback we receive from stakeholders:

- Influences where we place our pipelines;
- What steps we take to minimize disruptions to the environment;
- What local labour and businesses we may use, and
- How we can make a positive difference through our community investment program.

Keeping you informed

Our Making Connections newsletter is designed to keep our community neighbours informed of our business operations and plans. Because we live and work in your community, we share similar interests with you — a healthy environment, vibrant community life and safe, reliably run operations.
