Asking to raise the rates even more than they already are is going to put many Canadians into financial troubles. Our Enbridge bill is so high every month that we can't afford to heat our workspace. We are in a 2800 sq ft warehouse and during the month of December our bill was almost $500, considering we keep the heat off at night and were away for the holidays many days in December. I don't understand some of their fees, for example how they can charge us $70 every single month just for being their customer, then all delivery fees. Enbridge is a very profitable company and doesn't need to raise rates because many Canadians can't afford to heat their businesses and their homes. I know because nearly all of my relatives and friends tell me the same thing.
