Preamble:

HONI submits that it is a principle of the law of compensation that – so far as possible by means of a monetary award – just compensation requires that a party be put in the position it would have been in had it not suffered the wrong complained of and cites Reeves v. Question(s):

- (a) Please provide the paragraph citation for the principle described.
- (b) Please advise whether an example of the application of this principle in the electricity regulatory context can be provided.
- (c) Please advise whether an example of the application of this principle in any other regulatory context can be provided.
