Hydro One makes brave statements about its service of customers, including the care of transmission lines to their homes. However, on our rural road, bounded by forests, we have huge, dying basswood trees overhanging the road and Hydro One transmission lines; they or their limbs will fall soon, inevitably interrupting service. Why can't we get timely preventive protection of our power lines? I do not have confidence that a rise in rates will result in better stewardship of rural transmission lines by Hydro One.
Please deny this request for a change of rates.
