As Canadians we have not experienced the current level of inflationary pressures like we are experiencing now in over 40 years. It is safe to say that these pressures came on suddenly and for most Canadians unexpectedly. Canadians are making adjustments as affordability of the necessities of life have forced us to have to make serious choices between heating our homes and paying our rent or mortgages. Basic grocery staples are out of the reach of many, and our food bank usage is at historic capacity. Large corporations, including utility companies, grocery chains and others are at the same time recording record profits.

This is not the time for a rate increase. This increase should be tabled until such time as these inflationary pressures are eased.

Please reject this proposed increase at this time.
