I do not have any problem in Enbridge Gas earning a fair profit. I find the disclosure very confusing. It would be good to take a average sized house of 1,250 square feet bungalow or 2 storey and show the rate cost over a year for the past year, current and anticipated next 3 years considering inflation. I can relate to that. Also, give a link to the map for the average person to find out what area or zone they live in and show future impacts. I am not looking for exact numbers but a reasonable approach for people to understand and plan properly. Also, how about a straight forward incentive package along with expanded information on very detailed ways with drawings and pictures (large and small fixes or improvements) of energy improvements for people to continue to improve their homes on an ongoing bases to reduce energy consumption as well as a list of qualified certified contractors for people to contact for a proposal. All contractors can apply to the list, but if unresolved complaints about their work or methods exceed a threshold then they will be dropped from the list.
