At a time when people can barely afford groceries, or to heat their homes, the Ontario Board of Electricity should be absolutely shutting down the idea of charging more per year for electricity. In a time of climate crisis, more time and energy should be spent finding greener solutions, rather than charging more for basic necessities. Tell me, is a recognized energy sales and distribution revenue of $3,461.5 million from general service users not enough? Corporate greed needs to be put to an end. This is absolutely unjust and taking food out of the mouths of families who have to decide if they want to be warm and turning their lights on, or going hungry.
