LETTER OF COMMENT

Comments:

Although I personally hold Enbridge stock and have made some returns from it, I strongly oppose the proposed increase in gas rates. Our monthly Enbridge expenses are already high. Meanwhile, the CEO of the company earns millions of dollars annually that far more than the vast majority of people. In the current economic climate, with widespread layoffs and many families struggling to make ends meet, it is difficult to understand why a rate increase is necessary. For me personally, this additional cost is not a financial burden. However, for many households, it will cause real hardship. Essential utilities like heating should remain affordable, especially when the economy is weak. Raising rates at this time is unreasonable and unfair to those who are already under pressure. I urge you to reconsider and reject this rate increase.
