It is my opinion that Enbridge Gas does not need to increase its rates. My gas bill has been going up and, indeed, increased after the carbon tax was removed. As an example, in July my gas bill was $35.07. In August it was $57.32. I do not have central air conditioning. I have not been using my oven. My furnace was not on. It appears that Enbridge Gas has already increased its rates. Is Enbridge Gas being a good corporate citizen by respecting the environment and lowering its methane gas emissions? So far, there appears to be no sign of that. Until Enbridge Gas proves it is truly caring about the environment and global warming problems, I do not feel it can justify being given permission to increase rates. Also, since I am a former Union Gas customer, why is Enbridge Gas asking for a larger increase for me?
