I strongly oppose London Hydro's proposed rate increase. There have already been many substantial increases over the last few years. When will it be enough? I understand that maintaining and improving the electricity system costs money, but I also don't believe customers should be forced to continuously cover the costs every year without clear evidence that every effort has been reasonably made to control expenses. While evidence that costs are being used to cover investments and upgrades are important, it is equally necessary to review whether funds are being efficiently distributed and whether they can be reorganized to be more efficient. London Hydro should be responsible to make all reasonable efforts necessary to avoid incurring costs on customers for an essential service. The cost of living is already placing significant financial pressure on many London families.
